

PROBLEM

Emma, mother of four-year-old twin girls, began to feel bodily pain and discomfort in her pelvic area in March, 2016. At first, doctors thought it was something to do with a possible infection in her fallopian tubes, so they sent her home with antibiotics. When they were ineffective, she was told to go to the hospital for extensive testing because they feared it could be something serious. Right away, Emma's husband, Felix phoned Best Doctors Insurance.

SOLUTION

Best Doctors quickly arranged for the appropriate tests to be administered. Multiple biopsies revealed two different types of lymphoma. It was the knowledge and advice from the Best Doctors medical team to send the results to specialists in Boston that saved Emma's life. They recommended a very specific hospital, according to the characteristics of her cancer. It was here that she underwent a bone marrow transplant for her serious form of lymphoma, which doctors told her falls into a category of only 8% that are this aggressive. Her treatment required that she have no physical contact with her family and daughters for five months, which was unbelievably difficult to endure. Today, she is in remission and living happily, raising her two spectacular daughters. She attributes her success in the battle against cancer to Best Doctors and is eternally grateful that she made the decision to acquire the insurance so many years ago.
